We need the FCC to defend the rights of millions of Internet users by upholding net neutrality protections.

The FCC should reject Chairman Ajit Pai's proposal to give the telecom giants like Verizon, AT&T, and Comcast the authority to throttle whatever they please, stripping users of the meaningful privacy and access protections we demanded and won just two years ago.

I'm concerned about ISPs being allowed to discriminate against certain types of data or websites because users will have fewer options and a less diverse internet.

Thankfully, the current Open Internet rules mean that ISP monopolies can't block or slow customers' ability to see certain websites or create Internet "fast lanes" by charging online services and websites money to reach consumers faster. That's the right kind of forward-looking approach to ensure the Internet remains a level playing field that benefits small businesses and consumers as well as entrenched Internet companies. Pai's proposal would transform Internet providers into Internet gatekeepers with an effective veto right on expression and innovation. That's not the kind of Internet we want to pass on to future generations of technology users.

Thank you for keeping Title II net neutrality rules in place to protect Internet users like me.

Sincerely,
